The Recipient of a Hundred Thousand Kisses Interviewed Briefly.

An Experience That Borders on the Extremely Wonderful.

The twin Ribles in the police court were reposing quietly in the rack attached to the witness stand of that temple-like spartment when a Republican reporter entered yesterday. They had been companious in the rack for five long years, and the brass edges that surround their soiled faces had been worn entirely off in some places and made quite thin in others. The leaves on which were recorded the doings of Job, Solomon, and Moses were as disconnected as the memory of a crank, and were held together by rubber bands. During their five years service they have been kissed nearly 100,000 times.

The service attached to the display of Mr. Baum's handsome and complete stock. His stock of French fabrics is the finest ever seen here, and his ladies' furnishing departments contain all that can be desired. Brocades, muslins, linens, fabrics, and the like are artistically arranged, while the low figures at which those goods are sold

"No," was the reply, in solemn accents: "same old hum-drum—the truth and nothing but the truth."

"You must be a very able kisser by this time?" continued the reporter, casting his off eye cynically at the calf skin cover, which looked as though it had been struck by a flash of "greased lightning."

"Well, slightly," replied the book through its blackened exterior. "I am kissed every day by not less than fifty people. The first person this morning to get in her osculatory work on me was a colored female. She was charged with vagrancy, and had evidently been indulging in spring onion tops from some ash heap and very bad whisky. Her kiss was very sudden, and reminded me of a thunder clap in spring. When Bailiff Barton said, "Kiss the book," she kissed me with a vengeance, and the strong oder and powerful concussion almost overcame me. I have been kissed by all classes of criminals. Murderers, drunks, disorderlies, thieves, vags, and innocent girls and boys who have been dragged into this cesspool of crime by unfortunate circumstances. There was another person who kissed me this morning and left an impression on my mind and face as well. He was what old man Barton terms a gutter-snipe. Other people speak of him as a confirmed drunkard or vagrant. The old follow looked as though he was afraid of soap and water and acted just like a man would who had the contract to destroy all the bad whisky in the world. He would make a first-class model for a statue of the frightful example, and I venture to say that almost any temperance society would pay him big money to pose for it. When told to kiss the book he did so. That is to say, he opened his cavernous mouth, and, after breathing the strong alcoholic vaporings of his diseased interior on my much-abused countenance, he applied both of his lips to my shrinking face.

terior on my much-abused countenance, he applied both of his lips to my shrinking face. It is unnecessary to add that the shock overcame me.

"I had barely recovered from the effects of the shock," continued the book, "before the judge said 'ninety days,' and the alcohol soaked individual staggered back in the dock. 'Paddy Jones,' roared Bailiff Barton, and the summons was answered by a greasy and buxom colored woman, with a pair of lips that reminded me of a beef liver split in the middle. The sight of those lips almost staggered me, and when she blinked her eyes and wriggled her opening preparatory to kissing me I recoiled in horror. When she did kiss me she left a large quantity of saliva on my face. Those are only a few cases, I could cite hundreds. No wonder nice people don't want to kiss me. a tew cases. I could cite hundreds. No wonder nice people don't want to kiss me. I am a badly used book and would almost object to kissing my own face. There are several soap fat men in town who have had their eyes on me and my twin. We are Bibles, it is true, but there is grease enough on our faces to make considerable ham-fat or cleomargarine."

At this innexture, the insular entered and

At this juncture the janitor entered and began to wipe off the faces of the Bibles with a gressy cloth. The reporter took advantage of the opportunity and made his exit.

The McCormick Hand of Mercy The parlors of Mrs. Simonds, at 313 I street southeast, overflowed last evening with a merry troop of children, members of the McCormick Band of Mercy. The exercises comprised readings, recitations, conversa-tions and singing. Miss Mattie Simonds pre-sided at the organ. The children joined in singing "My Country "Tis of Thee," "Josus, Lover of My Soul," &c., and a duet was sung by the Misses Mattie and Elinor Simonds by the Misses Mattie and Elinor Simonds. Recitations were very cleverly given by Effie Fowler, Elinor Simonds, Bertie Walsh, Mary Davies, Hettie Mattingly, Emma Boswell, Eva Holmes, Eddie Webb, Frank Ackward, John Holmes, Zullie Thompson, Sela Williams, Jennie Brian, Eva Gallagher, Mamie McGrath, Nena Heiner, and Lulu Sears, Mr. Russell, of the Humane society, was present and gave the members some timely suggestions touching the conduct of Band of Mercy meetings, in order that they may be profitable as well as pleasing.

As the professor takes no fees less than $25, and sometimes receives as high as a $1,000, the public will at once see that this person is an impostor. A Card.

The names of the residents are certified by the assessor, and the chief of police then makes an examination of the locality and the application. The application is then sent to the liquor license board and is approved or disapproved as the case might be.
